Nothing phone (1): The most talked-about gadget of the year

A snazzy smartphone with a neat party trick, squeaky clean software to show off

MALA BHARGAVA

♦ he folks at Nothing know very well how to hyper-hype a product. The company is, after all, founded by Carl Pei, who is also the founder of OnePlus, which he eventually left to its own devices. It worked for OnePlus; it worked for the Nothing Ear1 earphones (5.3 lakh units sold) and now in overdrive for the new phone. Of course, hype does not necessarily guarantee a product that justifies the noise. But it could — at least

The Nothing Phone or phone (1), to give it its proper name, is different right from the packaging onwards. It comes in the slimmest phone box I've ever come across. Unlike Apple or Samsung or a host of other companies, there isn't a legacy of chargers lying around. So you will have to buy one — add about ₹2,000 — or will need to use some other phone's charger. There's a uniquely designed SIM ejector pin in the box, but other than that just the cable, literature, and a transparent back case. Oh

The phone itself is lightish and fairly slim, except that it's also broad and feels larger than it is.

The design of the phone (1) is a key factor in whether it will be a big hit or not. It's iPhone-shaped with the much-imitated boxy flat look and general impression it gives. Nothing is happy for everyone to saying its in name in the same breath as the iPhone because they want it to seem like an alternative to that phone. It quite simply isn't, no matter how many elements are lifted off.

Glyph light show

The back of the phone (1) is its most unique feature, addressing the sheer boredom everyone is experiencing with these devices all looking the same, but for minor variations in colour. The glass back is transparent, showing a few of the innards, just as was the case with the ear (1) earphones. There's a black and a white version and both have their own charm. Under that glass are 900 tiny LED lights. It's these that Nothing calls the 'Glyph Interface". These lights turn on when you open the camera app with the rear lens ready to shoot in the Photo mode. You must have the option turned on from settings to begin with. You can use them as a fill instead of a flash (there's that too). But it is rather bright and can be a little blinding and distracting if you're shooting a person. If you're taking a candid shot, it'll give you away. It works only with the rear camera, not the front since you're shooting yourself. The Glyph lights have their own tab under the main settings, but you can't do too much with them such as change the colours. The brightness is rather high even at a low level. The more useful thing that the lights do is flash in different patterns for your contacts you have to choose and set them. The phone has a really fun set of 10 ringtones that are unique and can be mapped to contacts. The lights flash when you get notifications and other silliness. This is someshow the batterv-charging status. All this is a great party time will whether users take tell it beyond the novelty level. Per-ally, I would turn them off almost immediately. These notification alerts etc require you to place your phone facedown, making one feel a little nervous. The device does come with a protective guard already in place, but still. The lights don't have too much impact on the battery, which is a good thing, but one possible flip-side is if these lights go through their natural life cycle and die out. I'm not sure if there's a way of dealing with that or if it's even a real danger. The lights also have a yellow-green border that's decidedly strange.

Android power

The phone (1) is very much an Android phone; in fact more do than usual because the software is mostly Android 12 except for minimal customisation from the NothingOS interface which brings in their special dotted font, icons and elements that go with the design and the Glyph interface and a few more details. Otherwise, it's comparable to the Pixel and comes with no bloatware and

The chipset, which is a Oualcomm Snapdragon 778G+5G. It should have perhaps been from the next level series, but it still does work well for everyday tasks and even a bit of gaming. I found only very slightest warming up occasionally but certainly not as much as on most other phones.

The phone (1)'s 655-inch display is a perfectly nice OLED that has a brightness level of 500 nits. It should have perhaps been brighter but it does peak at 1200 nits. One of the nicest things is the even and thin edges around. The screen does have a 120Hz refresh rate raising from 60Hz when given certain

The fingerprint sensor is underdisplay and works adequately though not noticeably rapidly. There are stereo speakers flanking top and bottom but they're just average. This phone doesn't have a headphone jack - not that it was expected. It doesn't have a memory card slot either. It does have IP53 splash resistance, so a few drops won't hurt it. The batterv is a 4.500mAh with 33W charging, 15W wireless charging and 5W reverse charging. But no charger. Haptic feedback is nice enough though I personally tend to like it a bit stronger such as on the OnePlus 10 Pro.

The camera set includes a 50MP Sony IMX766 main camera and 50MP Samsung JN1 ultra-wide. The Nord 2T uses the same primary. Images resulting from the primary are good without over-saturating the colours. Night time photos are impressive and noise free. Dynamic range and exposure is good. There is the usual drop in quality with the ultrawide lens. The front camera does a satisfactory job.

Having had the phone only for a couple of days, I will reserve comments until I've had time to ex-

The price of the phone (1) starts from ₹32,999 and goes up to ₹38,999 depending on the RAM and storage variant you choose. It is to be found on Flipkart. It's generally been considered a good

Make life easier with smart home tech

A round-up of the conveniences that connected gadgets can bring you today

MAHANANDA BOHIDAR

₹rom keeping you entertained when you come back from work to ensuring safety at home while you're away on vacation, these technologies work around the clock to ensure you can have some worry-free time at home. With features that can be customised on a companion app to built-in voice assistants that double up as your 'Man Friday', these gadgets could end up making managing home a whole lot

Stay secure

Home cameras add an extra layer of protection by giving you realtime updates of people, pets, and vehicles in and around your house. Choose one that comes with in-built motion detection or one that simply records without panning sideways. Similarly, you can pick between wired and wireless cameras. In areas with extreme weather patterns, outdoor cams that are resistant to rain, heat, and snow would work well. In apartments that already have CCTV cameras outdoors, you can consider having a doorbell camera that lets you check who's visiting. These typically have a built-in microphone and speaker so you can talk to whoever is on the other side before letting them in. Another feature you might want to doublecheck is the availability of highdefinition video footage, and night-vision. Some of the many options available are the Google Nest Cam, Mi 360 Home Security Camera 2K Pro, Qubo Smart Cam 360, and the Godrej Seethru series. The more affordable options might cost around ₹2,000 and the higher-end ones go up to almost ₹30,000 or more.

Tech to entertain

Going beyond just entertainment, new-age smart speakers can be used to automate a lot of routines at home. Apart from using it to play music wirelessly, you can "talk" to your speaker and ask it to "Switch off TV at 8 PM", "Change to warm yellow light at 10 PM" or "Play Hip-Hop Favourites now". If you pick one with a digital screen as well - like the Amazon Echo series - you have the added advantage of making video calls, watching media, and displaying family photographs digitally. Some popular options to choose from are the Apple HomePod Mini, Sonos One speaker, the Amazon Echo Show series that come with an HD display, and the Lenovo Smart Clock. In general, smart speakers can cost you anywhere between ₹3,999 and ₹40,000 depending on the company and specs.

New-age cleaning

What a relief it would be to never have to sweep the house ever again. That's the advantage of owning a smart vacuum cleaner. These little digital elves are designed to keep your home spotless with minimal effort from your end. You can programme some to start dusting when you leave the house and wrap it up by the time you're back. You can set rules for which rooms to clean, which to avoid, and when. With smart sensors, many of these avoid sucking up electrical cords or solid waste and will make their way to the charging dock when low on battery. The battery life, mop functionality, and compatibility with digital assistants like Alexa or Siri are some of the things you might want to check before buying. Consider checking out the latest iRobot Roomba j7+ Robot, Realme TechLife Robot Vacuum, Philips SpeedPro Aqua Cordless Stick and the Dyson V12 Detect Slim Total Clean, among other options. Smart vacuums generally start at a price-point of about ₹20,000 and some of the high-end ones easily cross the ₹1-lakh mark.

Let there be light

Life's little comforts now include not having to drowsily get up from bed to switch off the lights before you fall asleep. And, smart lights are the tech that makes it possible. Generally connected to your home Wi-Fi network, and fully customisable through a companion app, these smart lights need no extra wiring or additional equipment to be set up. All of them let you tune into some mood lighting - be it a quiet, mellow night reading in bed or hosting a bunch of friends for a party! You can choose from endless colour options or use some pre-set themes available on the app. You can also automate the timer and schedule functions for the lights to turn on the moment you reach home from work or switch off when you go to bed at night. Companies such as Philips, Mi, Wipro, Syska and Panasonic have a range of LED smart colour bulbs to offer. Generally within the ₹1,000-2,000 range, these are easily the most affordable "smart" gadgets to have at home.
